Replacing Manual Processes with Multi-Faceted Solutions

Dover Corporation, a multinational, multi-billion dollar manufacturer of specialized industrial products and equipment, maintains operations throughout the world, employing more than 34,000 people. To help ensure that the company wouldn't run afoul of U.S. export laws, Dover had to screen its vendors, customers, and employees against mandatory government lists of Denied Parties—a time-consuming task that was a constant source of stress for the organization.

The Challenge: Replacing a Time-Consuming Process

All Dover transactions were being processed manually, using a free database system. Shipping Supervisor Bonnie Nagel quickly saw how inefficient and wasteful this was. Aside from the excessive time it took to screen this way, the daily updates to government-maintained watch lists meant that whenever a new export transaction took place, the screening process had to be repeated, one-by-one for every individual name, even for clients with whom the company had been dealing for years. Dover could not afford any more squandering of time and resources by individually screening and re-screening the same parties over and over again.

Dover Corporation, a leading manufacturer of industrial products and equipment, needed to improve the efficiency of its compliance program.

“ We use Descartes Visual Compliance™ on a daily basis to stay compliant with the government's rules and regulations, and to make sure we're not dealing with parties we shouldn't be. I can't think of any way that they could have done better in helping us achieve what we wanted. As we moved forward, we knew we had made the right decision.
